To Mr. Cannon with love.
The Class of 1970

It is the spring of 1970 and the rains come trickling down. The frequently seasoned and sanded snow is washed away. The hardened ice melts as a season comes to a close and the land decides to change its colours and its peoples.

The Senior today is graduating from an educational institution that has gone through slow but torturous processes of change. The "Manhattanville College of the Sacred Heart" does not exist today and to write about what has happened in the past four years or one year is an incredible task. We cannot exactly name the time or the place, but somewhere in the jungle of events, the snake slithered and jerked its way out of the old skin and emerged with a new garb textured in much the same way but patterned differ-ently. Manhattanville had decided on rejecting a habit and tried hard to fashion a new and more practical costume.

These were the faltering steps in a game of hop-scotch that ended in a head-long rush towards SCULPT and Curriculum Reform.

When did it all begin? Confused and pained Alumnae complained as the Candle-light dinners were dropped and the dress-code summarily rejected.

1969 began with the President encouraging and demanding student interest in the policies of the college. There was general agreement on the inadequacy of the educational system as it then stood. The Prom Room and the cafeteria seemed shattered by shrapnel as little groups clumped around their tables and tore at each other trying to decide what they were discussing and what should be done. That was SCULPT I and as a result the new calendar and other issues were conceived — a seed. The calendar only came into being after the rally in the fish-bowl, which nobody remembers especially since the scene is now converted into the Registrar's office.

At some point in the spring of '69 Manhattanville interest ricocheted off the topic of deep-tan and Coppertone into a maze of black and white issues. The refusal to admit the failure of Share and hence the existence of a racial problem was pushed aside, as a meeting was scheduled by Student Government and the Manhattanville Afro-American Society for May 1. Real problems and prejudices were thrown under the glare of a surgical light and the decision to get together a set of demands took the crowd until midnight. The Castle lawn stood silent observer to a morning sit-in when the demands were presented to Sister McCormack by 500 students. There followed the large May 12 meeting when the Administration announced its progress report in response to the demands. The issue of racism was blanketed by assurances of practical solutions and mainly eclipsed due to the preoccupation with Mr. Plunkett, and intense student opinion on faculty tenures. The dedication of the yearbook to this popular man came at a supremely ironical moment as the school tossed in a state of furor over his status and departure.

The Academic year 1969-70 began with the new Dean Mr. Harold Cannon. Manhattanville went through its paces as students were admitted to the Academic Policy Committee and the Faculty Executive Committee. As part of the Curriculum Reform students were encouraged to undertake more independent study projects using research facilities at other institutions.

The whole change in academic policy was also carried into the change in the religious nature of Manhattanville. The Eucharistic Banquet as initiated by William Johnson and George Brand reflects this new movement towards personal religion.

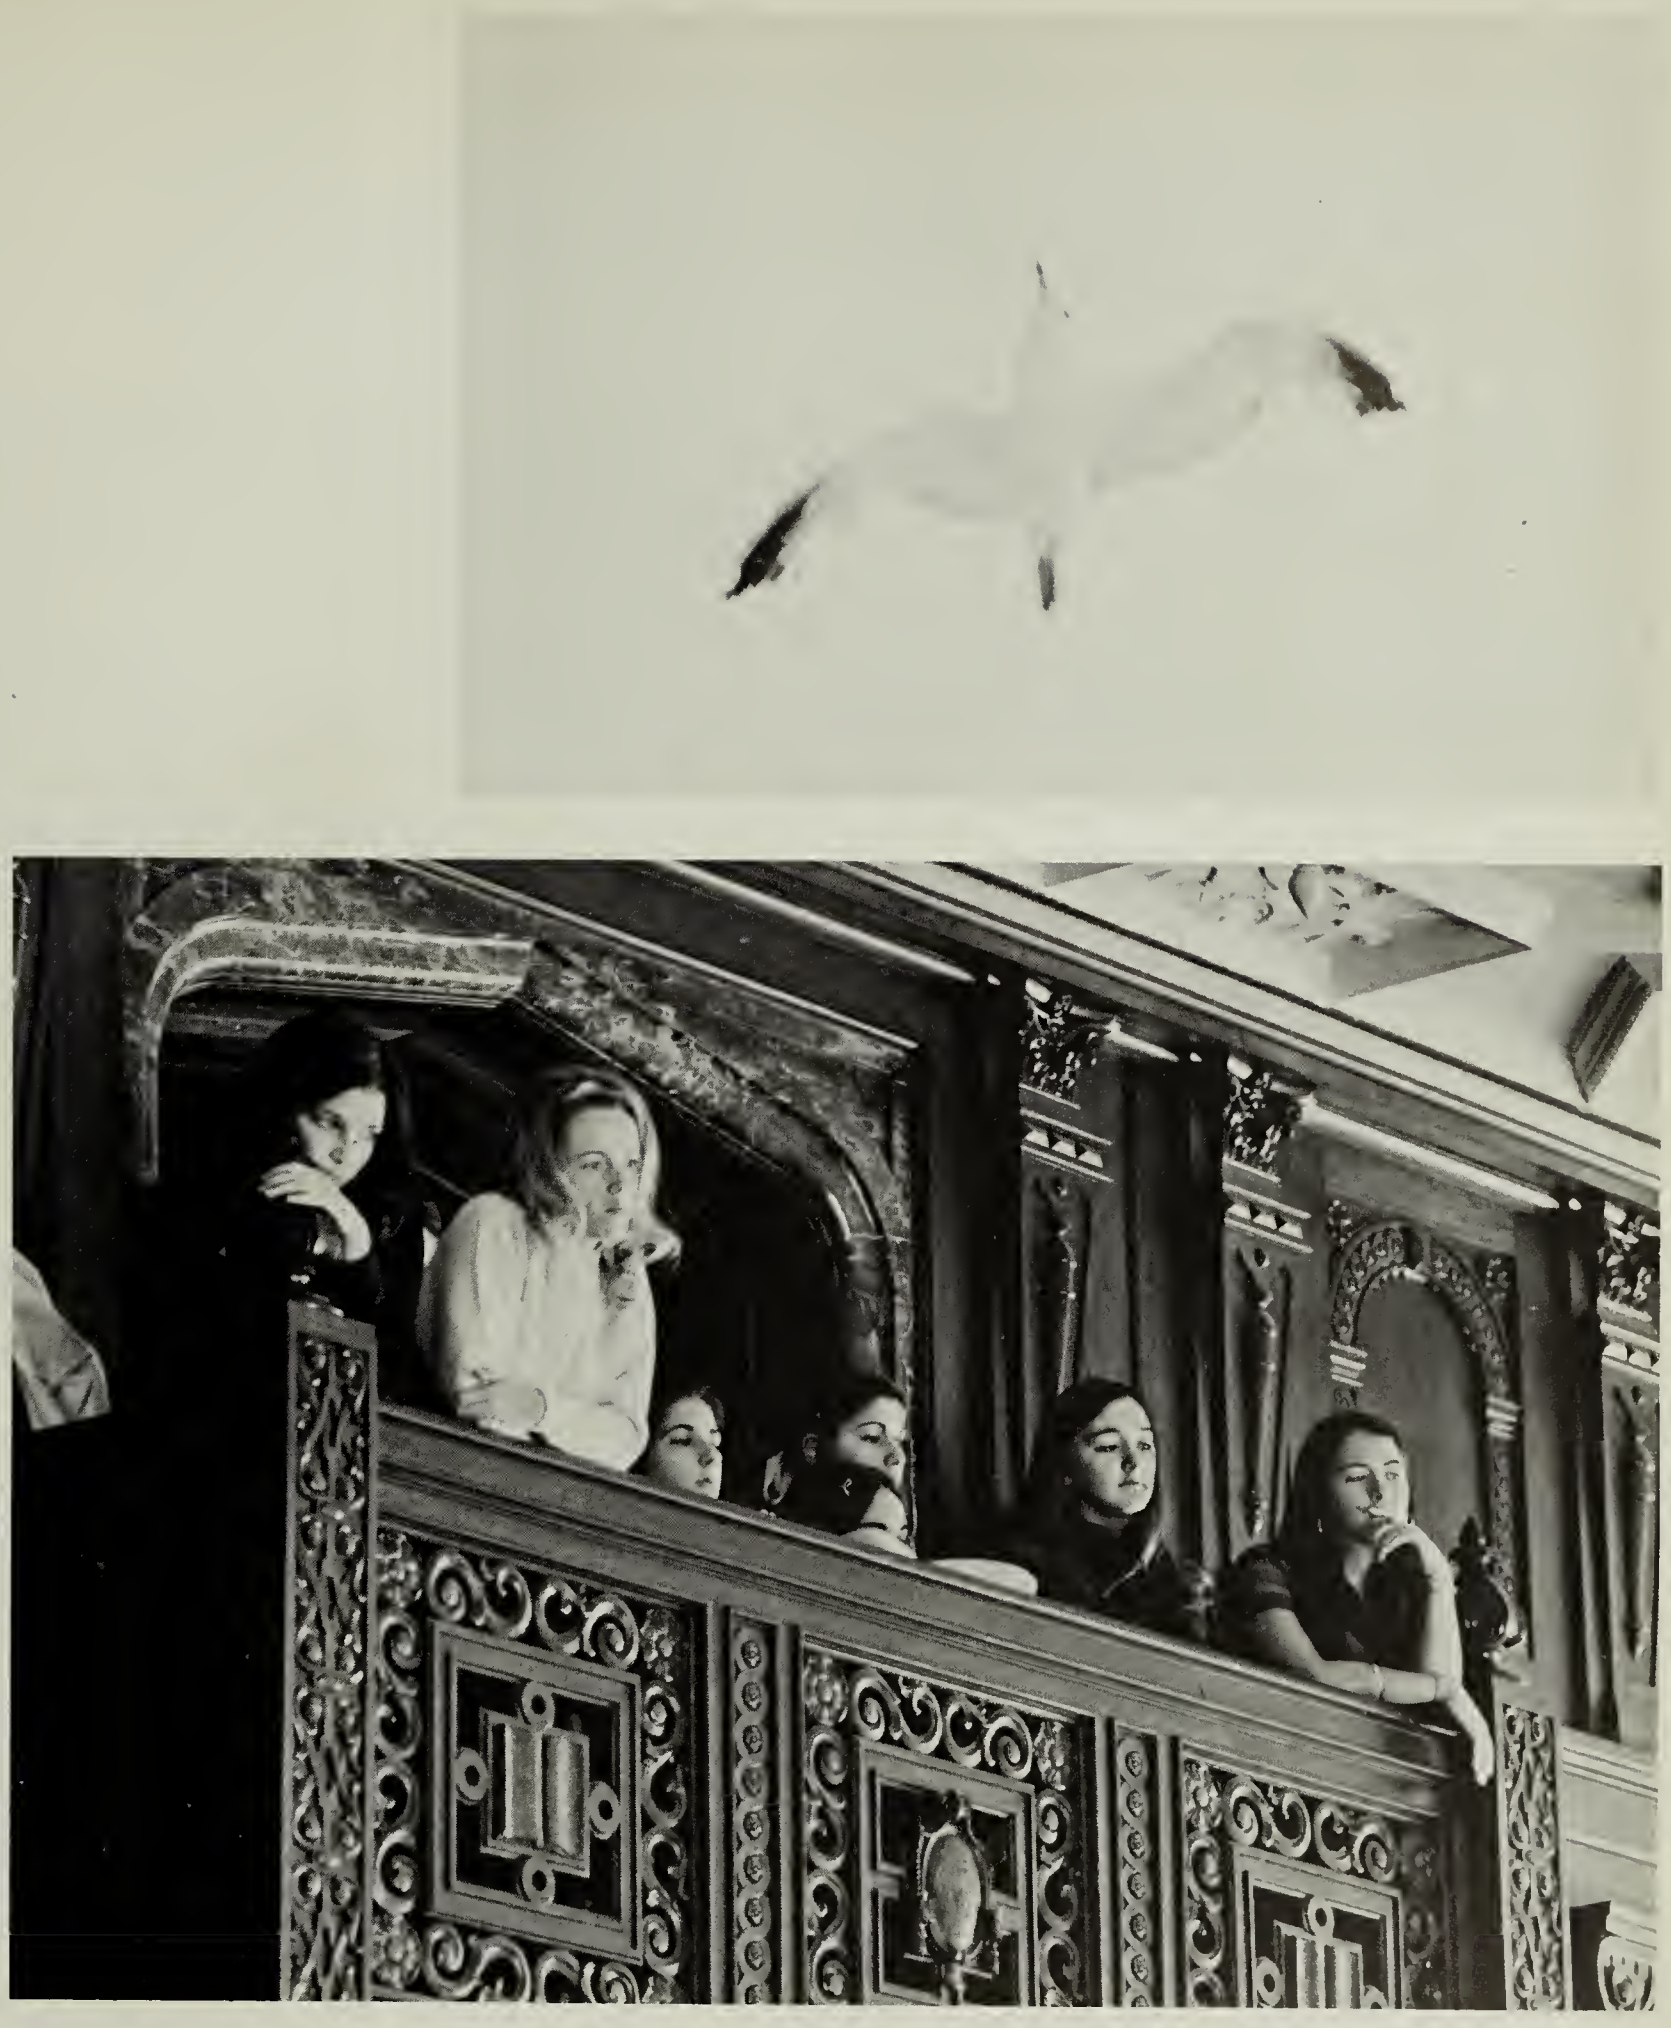

GDP

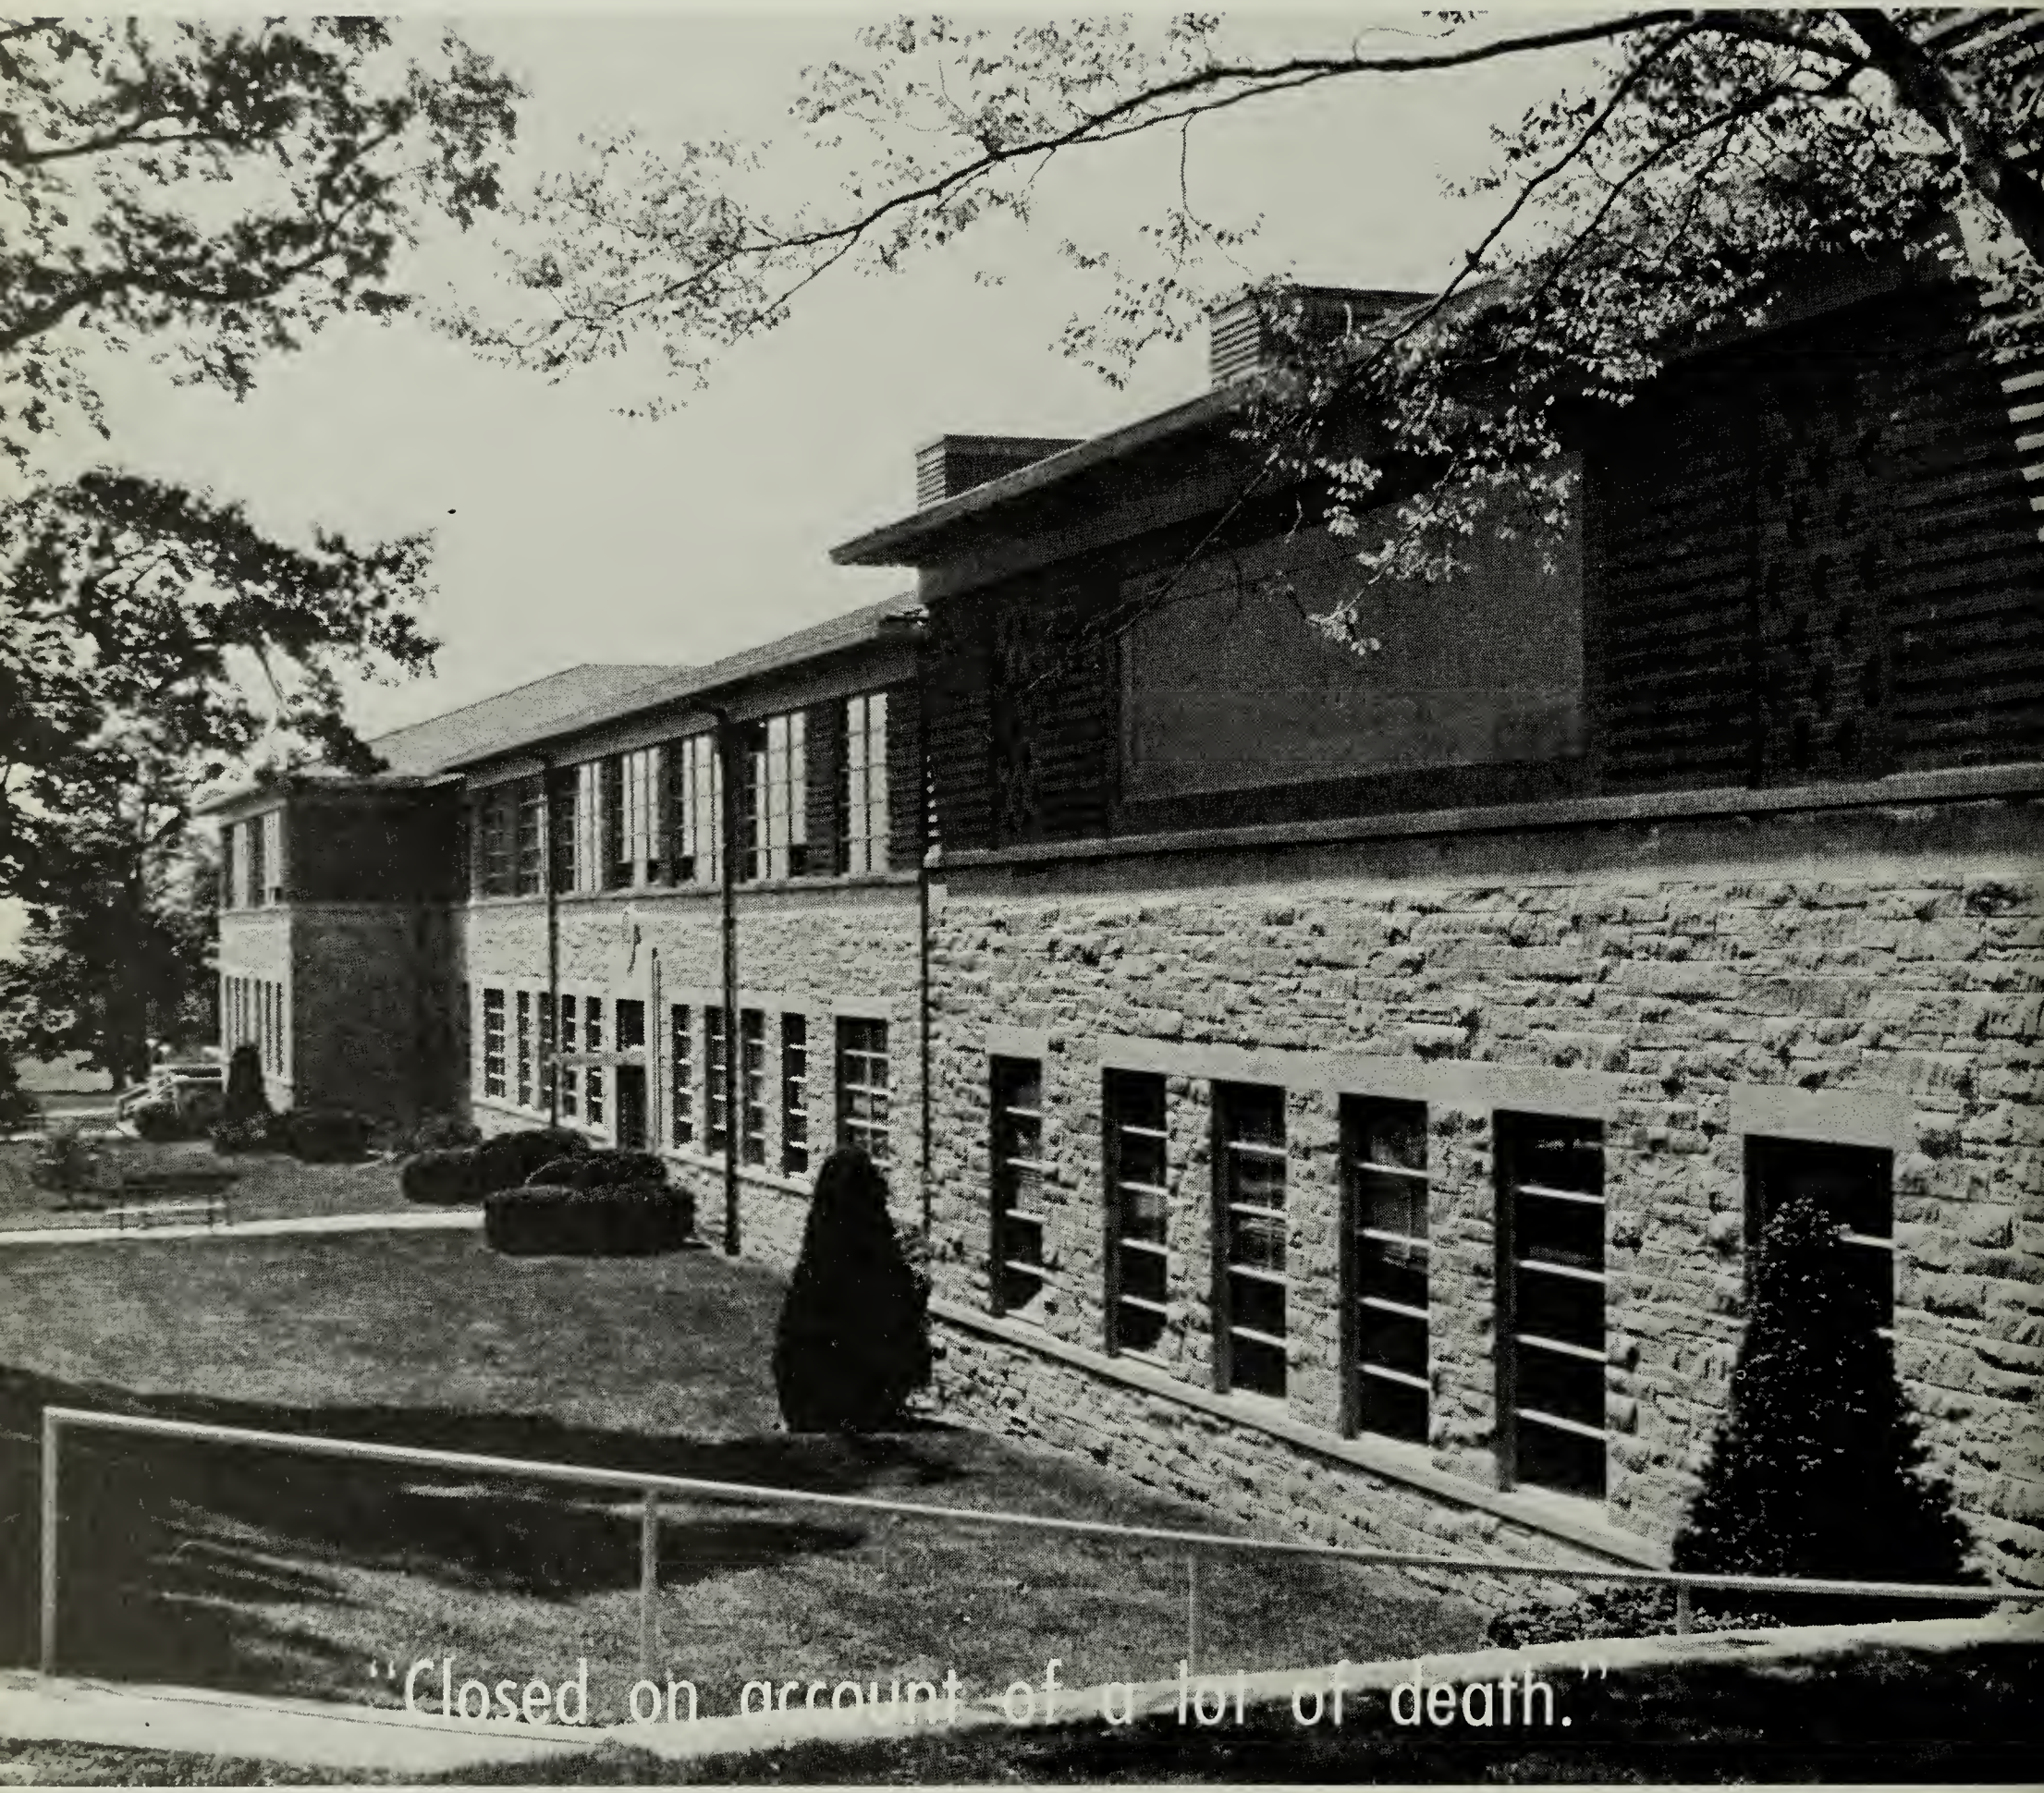

Touchstone had already lost its monopoly on the student readers as G.D.P. was born in the April of '69.

Now this daily paper accompanied by occasional "Black Gold" publications made the cafeteria an astonished witness to a day-by-day Sculpt.

Its newly carpeted and decorated interior suffered shocks as in addition to the engagement "La-la-da-da-di-da!" it was given doses of Guerrilla Theatre for the Vietnam Moratorium and silent dinner protests in support of the Black movement.

Alice's Restaurant

The wave crashed on December 8, 1969 at 6:30 p.m. as the Fall Calendar tried to pull to a close. Many termed it "The Revolution" as a group of Manhattanville Black students occupied Brownson Hall. The confusion of classrooms and procedures struggling to maintain what could be termed normalcy was pathetic.

The events of that week can only be coherently described in short strobe flashed — piercing pictures.

The 300 students who chose to support their "Black Sisters" went through the most emotional and cathartic experience at Manhattanville.

A group of 150 also made a stand against the tactics employed.

It is only appropriate to quote Dean Cannon's words describing the events as a "crash course in human relationships."

Courses and exams receded in the mind as obviously irrelevant issues. The days were packed with rallies, discussions, rumors and panic. The seeds of a dialogue were just being sown.

Larene Brown would deliver her sermons and the Castle, now rechristened Reid Hall, would stand amazed witness to sit-ins outside the faculty meetings and sleep-ins in the West Room. The building which once contained the nuns within its battlements now was laid open to reporters and pressmen and parents.

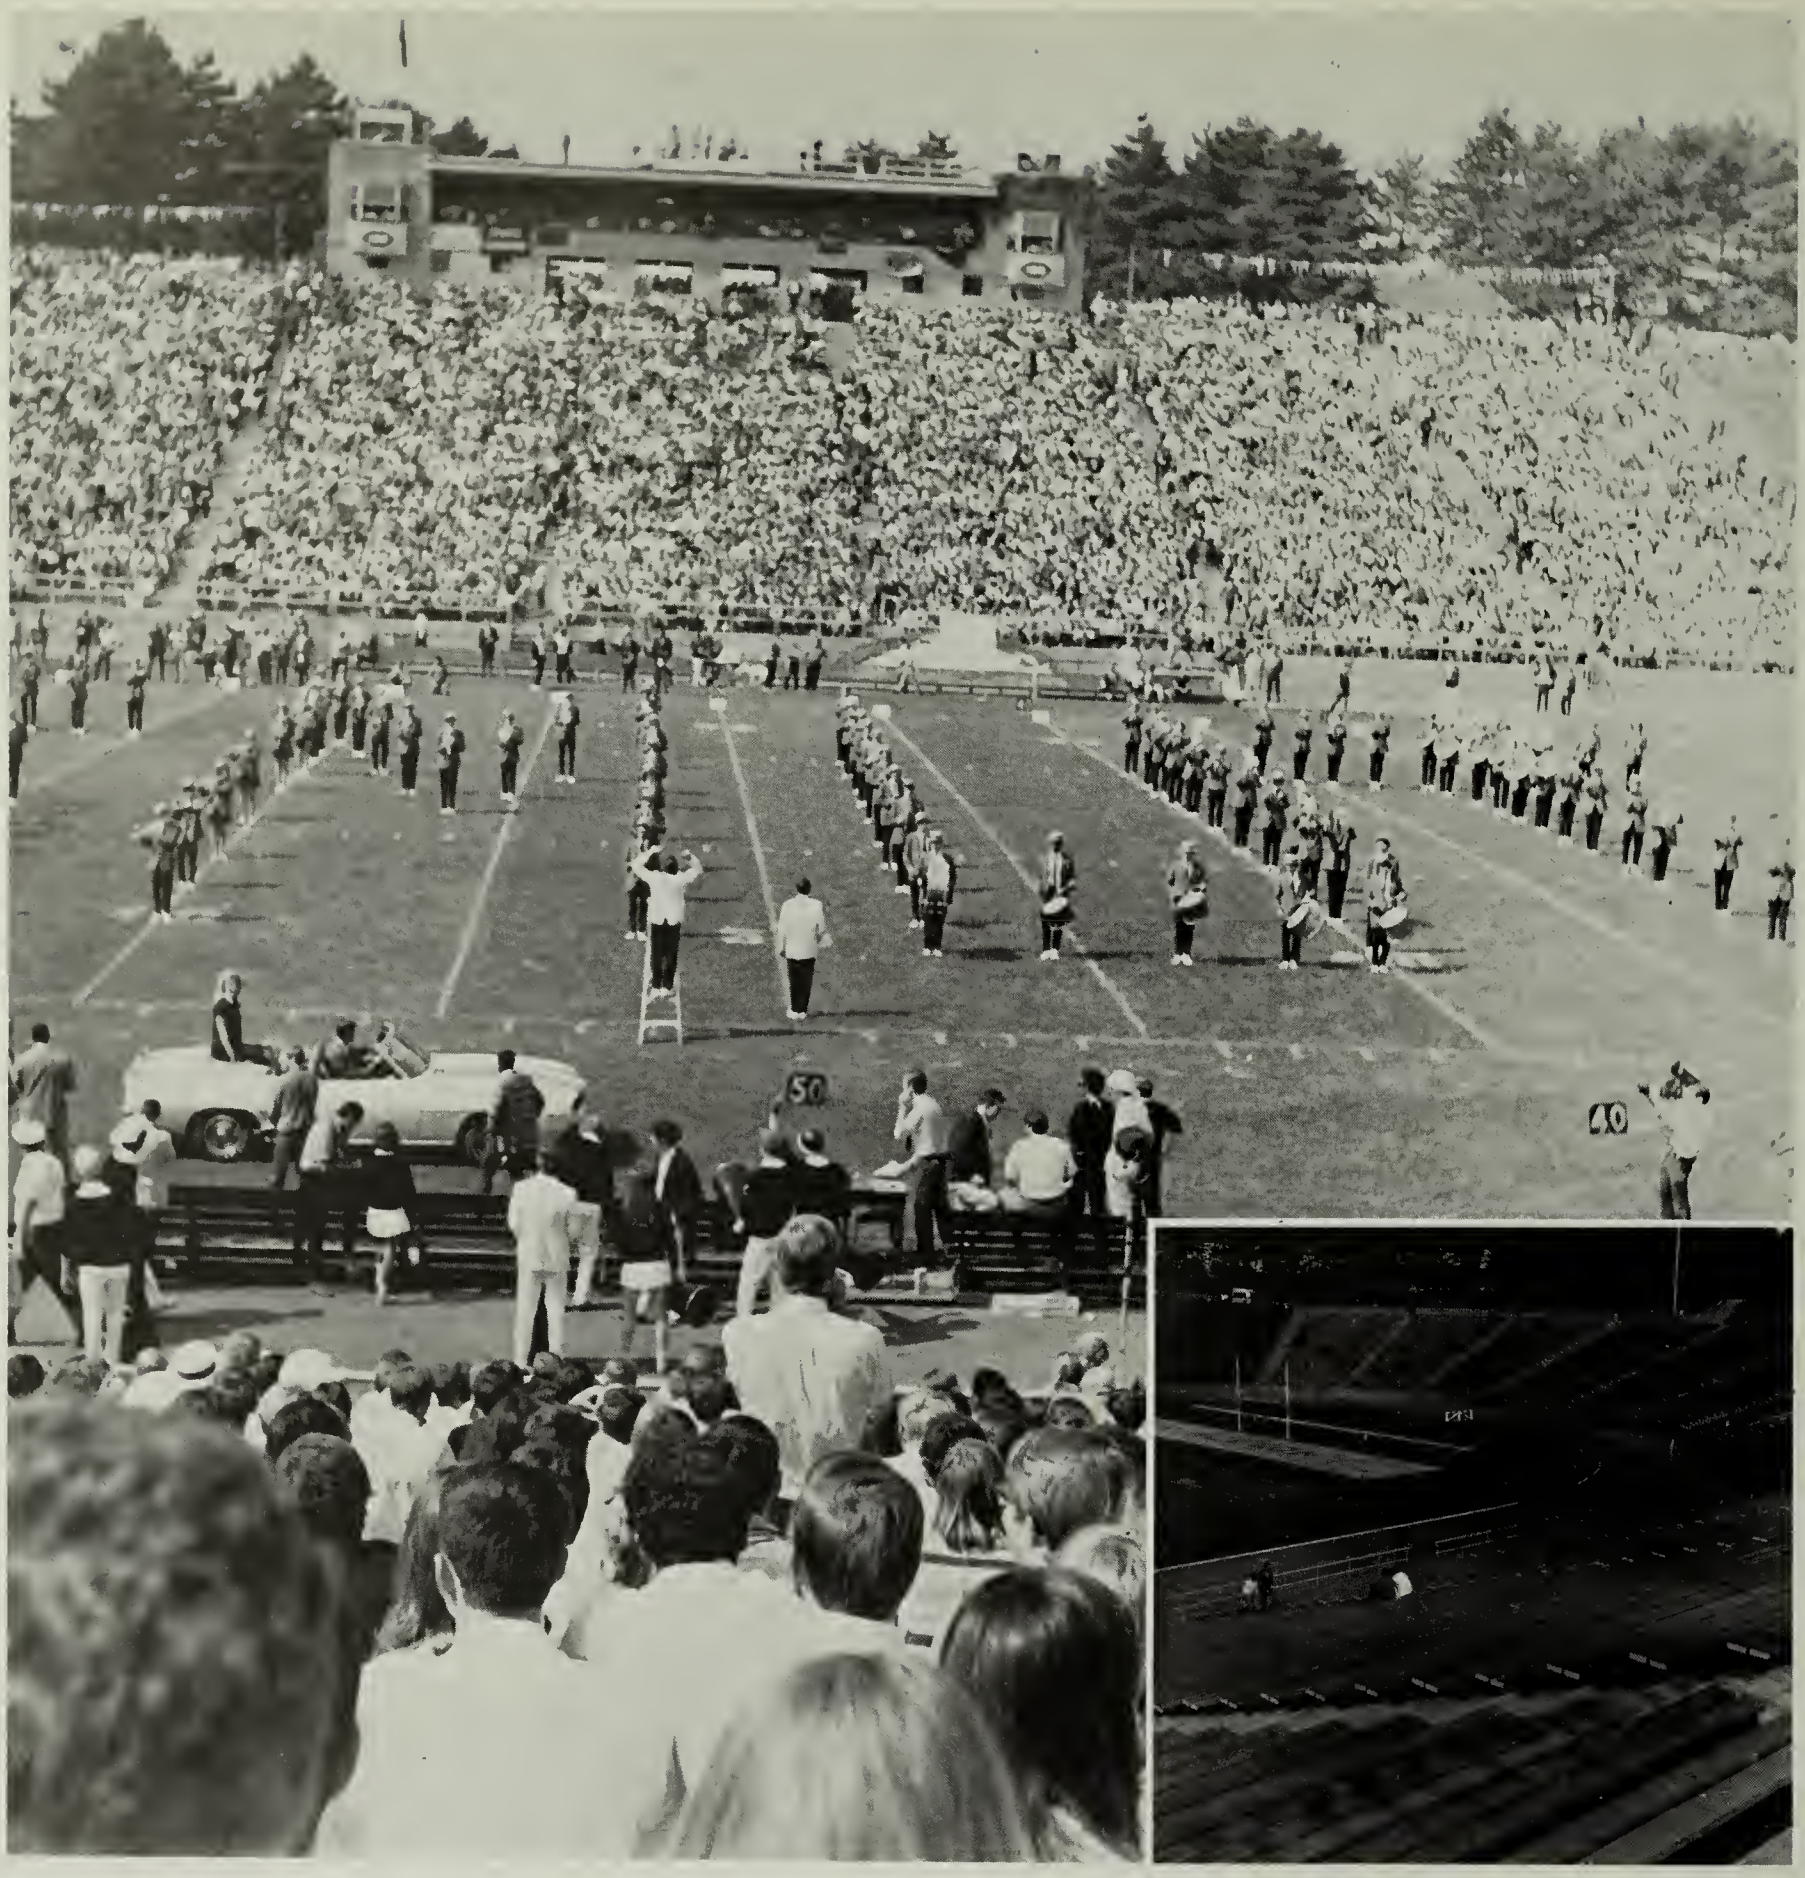

Did Manhattanville and its students recognize what Sister McCormack called "the basic validity of the struggle for racial justice?" Did this week in cold December in fact increase the polarization between the Blacks and the constantly silent white majority that left as soon as school closed? Was it academic pressures that kept most girls away from what the "Black Experience Week" of February 8-14 had to contribute to the "Manhattanville Scene?" What is the "Manhattanville Scene?" Is it the "family struggling to know itself through efforts of SICC, the Students Interested in the Creation of a Community?"

A senior sits back as she winds her rollers through her hair. What does change mean to her? Memories come giggling in and she rejoices hysterically over 3 o'clock parietals and optional hours.

Manhattanville had meant going away to Columbia, Yale, and Princeton for three-day week-ends. Manhattanville was Sagittarius and spring fever! Manhattanville was etching your name on Hilltop's mauled interior. This has never ended and will never. College was four years of bubbles and chattering laughter — what is change?

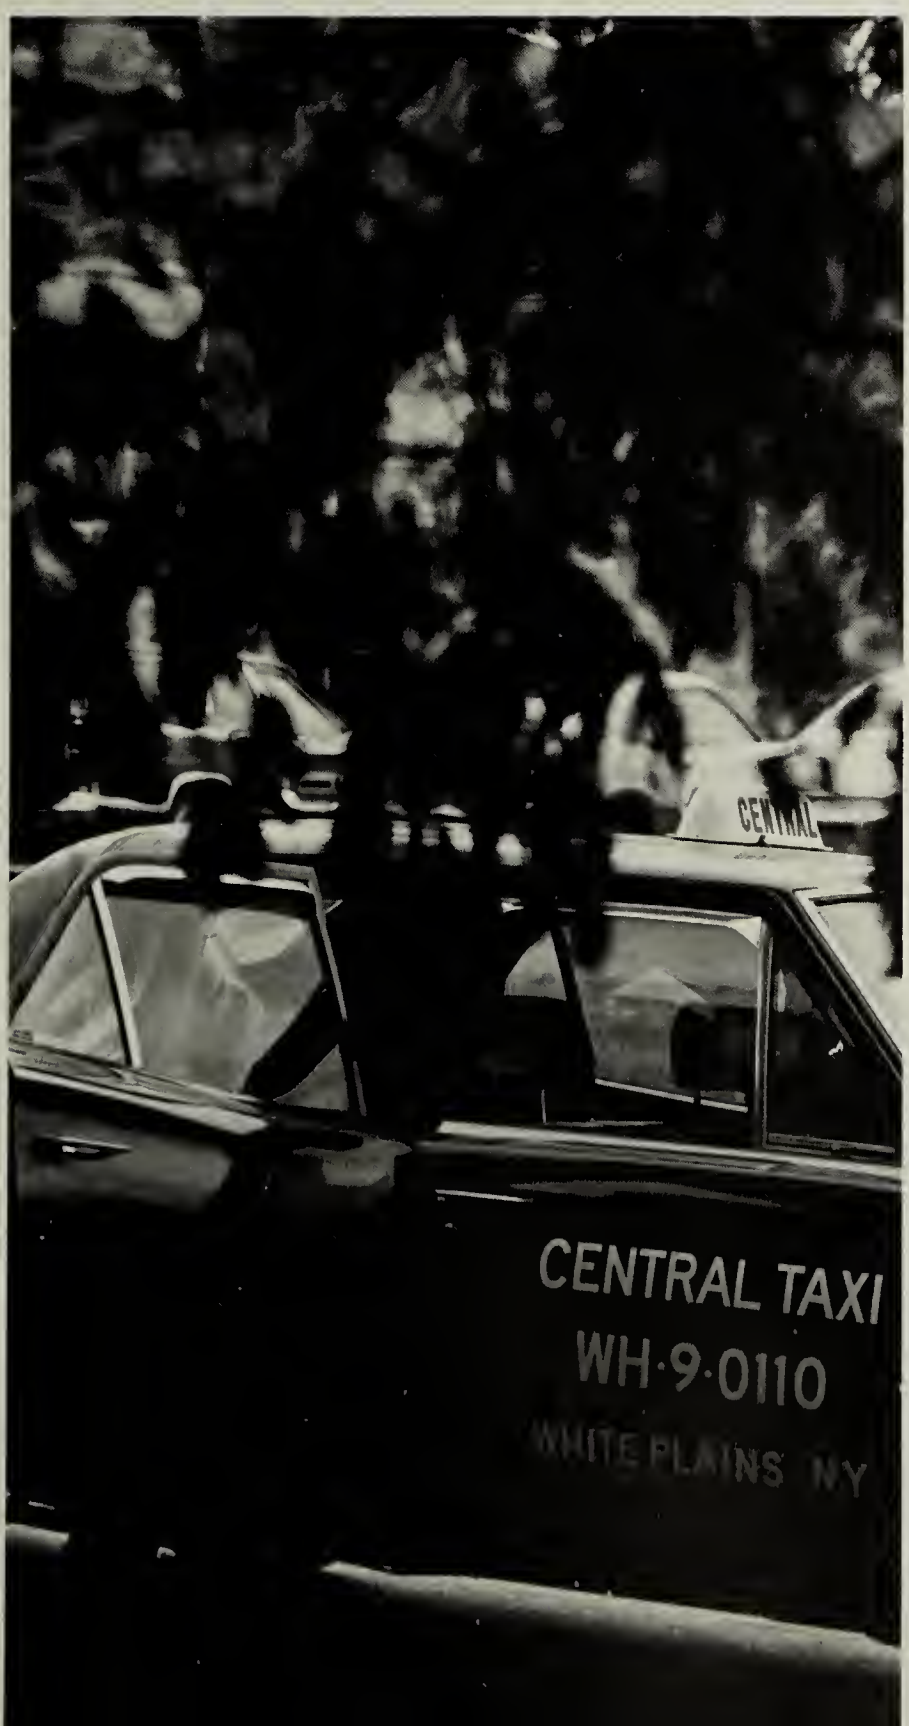

However, it is Spring of 1970 and the graduating class does contain within it the stir of what Mrs. Cecilia Bryand hailed as a "revolutionary consciousness." What does the rhetoric of change eventually amount to?

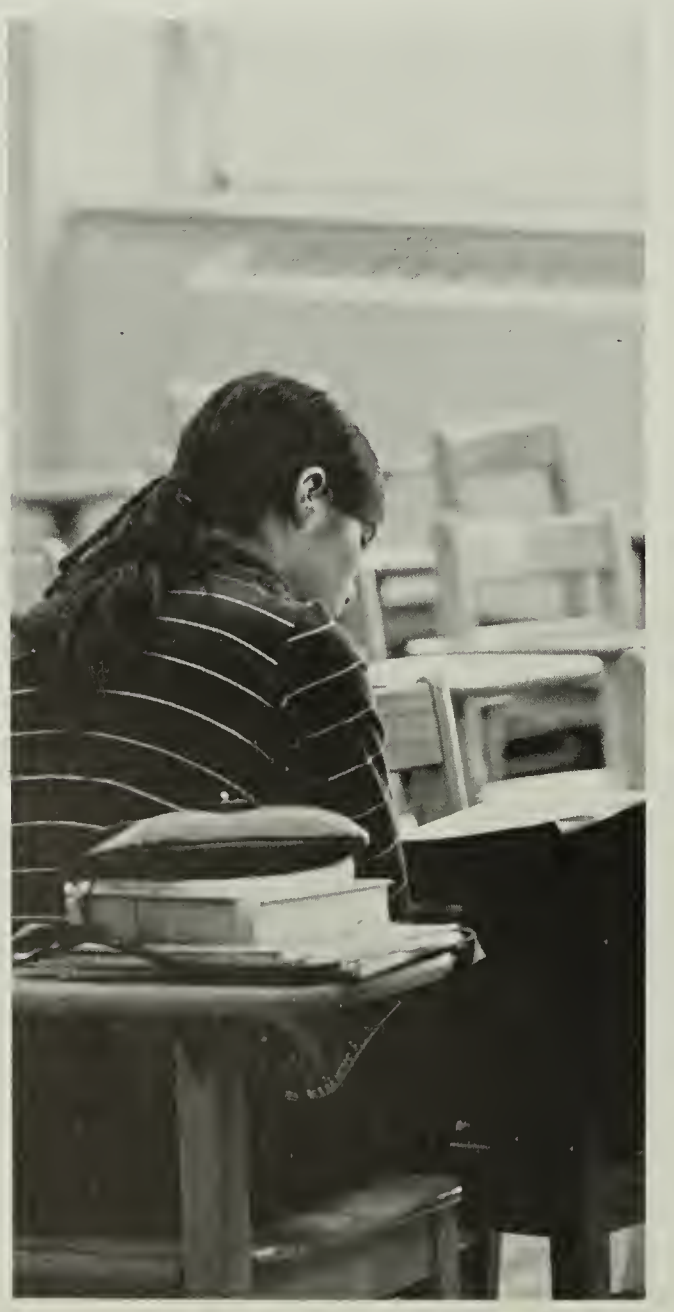

Did the four year college experience begin in her a change of attitudes? As she drifts out of her academic ivory tower will Rev. Johnson's eulogy on Martin Luther King never stop haunting her?

Does she think of the Time-Out in the Fall of 1967 as the birth of her consciousness?

Is she now challenged by the tension of change? While Admissions and Administrations try to bring a more heterogeneous group to the "exclusive" Manhattanville, she can but smile at the incoming freshman and wish her well—be it survival or be it a submergence, let it be a full experience.
